CHARLES BRIDGE. Length: 520m (1,700ft), material: stone. Construction started in 1357 by order of Charles IV. The previous bridge was washed away by flood waters and this was the only bridge in town for next 500 years. St John of Nepomuk was thrown off from it in 1393. A crucial battle for Prague was fought here in 1648 between the Protestants and invading Swedish troops - the last battle of the Thirty Years War. Coronation processions would cross it on their way from downtown to the Castle. It's a special place to visit with different moods in different parts of the day, always humming with life.

KLEMENTINUM (D7) was a Dominican monastery since 1232. Acquired by the Jesuits for their COLLEGE, it expanded into the second largest compound to the Castle. Now, it's used by the National Library, Meteorological observatory (weather recorded since 1776), and for miscellaneous cultural events.
